

Chicago Style Referencing Guide. Sydney Conservatorium of Music.

You must cite (with a footnote) every single piece of information, opinion and quotation in your assignment except your own interpretations and reasoning, and if something is widely known in your field, it doesn't need a citation e.g. Mozart wrote in the Classical period.

The footnote is placed at the end of the information it refers to.

When you quote any text from a source, you need both "quotation marks" and a footnote.

Almost every footnote will contain a page number showing the exact page(s) your information came from.

You must cite the source in which you read something.

Illustrations and musical examples can be acknowledged in a footnote, or in brackets as part of a caption.

The easiest way to use citations is to use "insert footnote" on your word processor. It will get the numbering, superscript and location on the page right. (Word: CTRL-ALT-F on PC or OPTION-COMMAND-F on Mac)

EVERY ASSIGNMENT NEEDS A BIBLIOGRAPHY. ALWAYS.

The entries in a bibliography are listed alphabetically (A-Z) by the authors' family names, or by title if there's no author.

Example using footnotes

Postgraduate study at Oxford widened Sculthorpe's knowledge of music, especially contemporary music. On 9 December 1958 he wrote to his parents: "[i]n a few months I've assimilated a whole world of music."<sup>1</sup> Fairly soon after arriving, he attended a lecture on electronic music. It may have been through the speaker, Australian Marc Wilkinson, that Sculthorpe got to know Varèse's works, as Wilkinson had been one of Varèse's students.<sup>2</sup> Sculthorpe discussed Varèse's music in the surviving draft of part of his thesis.<sup>3</sup> Later, he told Michael Hannan he also got to know Messiaen's music and saw copies of the avant-garde periodical Die Reihe at this time.<sup>4</sup> Sculthorpe also attended the lectures and events of the Oxford University Contemporary Music Club (OUCMC), whose members were mostly interested in the contemporary European avant-garde, to the extent that when Copland visited, some avoided him.<sup>5</sup>

A QUOTATION needs inverted commas and a footnote at its END

This INFORMATION is in the thesis writer's own words. It needs a FOOTNOTE to identify its source

One anecdote seems to indicate that Sculthorpe presented himself as a composer of deliberately 'Australian' music from fairly early in his time at Oxford. The first time he met Edmund Rubbra, Rubbra welcomed him "Ah! ... Australia's Bartók!" delivered in an amusing way."<sup>6</sup> Clearly, Bartók's success in developing what was widely recognized as distinctively Hungarian avant-garde music made him a potential model for the musical aspirations of other nationalist composers, and in this case, Bartók's project provided a gently teasing point of comparison with Sculthorpe's ambitions. It was only a few years earlier, for instance, that Xenakis had spoken of his desire to become a "Greek Bartók."<sup>7</sup>

This sentence has no footnote because it is the writer's own interpretation

Because Skinner's book has been cited before in this writing (fn2), a SHORTENED FORM of citation is used, but now with the new page numbers specific to where this information came from

<sup>6</sup> Peter Sculthorpe to Edna and Jos Sculthorpe, 15 November 1958, Papers of Peter Sculthorpe, National Library of Australia.

And:

Even though the interpretation quoted in this sentence comes from exactly the same place as the next sentences, this needs its own citation because it's a QUOTATION

Lawrence's relationship with America and Mexico involves him seeking, and finding, a source of spiritual renewal for what he feels has been lost in Europe and in modern, western cultures.<sup>8</sup> He casts Native Americans in a primitivist light in order to achieve this, and imbues the very landscape with a 'primitive' energy, whilst also presenting the 'peasants' as part of nature, for example, "a powerful heart... secretly beating, the heart of the earth."<sup>9</sup> However, as in so many cultural encounters in which one figure is casting the other in an exoticist frame Lawrence presents this ambivalently, and in The Plumed Serpent the European character exploring Lawrence's interests and encounters in Mexico, Kate, is fearful and experiences the sun as dark and sinister. Mexicans are both 'children' and 'demons,' and like so many westerners, what Lawrence wants from them is for them to be ancient, not modern, a vehicle for his hoped-for connection to 'timeless' spirituality. He sees sun, landscape and people as part of the spiritual renewal he seeks, but a renewal that is frightening and alien.<sup>10</sup> In an essay he wrote during his time in New Mexico, he outlined some of his feelings:

There are 3 SUCCESSIVE SENTENCES with interpretations from the same source. Since they are in succession, we only need a single footnote at the END

This is a LONG QUOTATION so it's indented and single spaced (these things show us it's a quotation so there's no need for inverted commas). But like all quotations, it needs its own separate footnote

I don't want to live again the tribal mysteries my blood has lived long since. I don't want to know as I have known, in the tribal exclusiveness. But every drop of me trembles still to the old sound, every thread in my body trembles to the frenzy of the old mystery... But I stand on the far edge of their firelight, and am neither denied nor accepted. My way is my own, old red father; I can't cluster at the drum anymore."<sup>11</sup>

This quotation by D.H. Lawrence was found in a book by Hough so it's a SECONDARY CITATION. You need to cite BOTH SOURCES in the footnote. Remember, if you don't cite where YOU find something, you risk plagiarism

<sup>9</sup> Jad Smith, "Völkisch Organicism and the Use of Primitivism in Lawrence's The Plumed Serpent," Agora (December, 2003), accessed 7 March, 2013, <http://castle.eiu.edu/agora/Dec03/JSmithall.htm>.

Anatomy of references

Shortened references in footnotes

These are used for the second and further footnotes of a particular source, after you've already given the full citation once.

Shortened footnotes contain the author's family name, a shortened form of the title, and page number(s).
E.g., footnote 1 below becomes as follows when it's shortened: Collins, Sounds from the Stables, 17.

Your footnotes should look like this:

1. Charles Fairchild, "Clouds, Crowds, and Idols: New Dynamics and Old Agendas in the Music Industry, 1982-2012," American Music 33, no. 4 (2015): 441-76, <https://doi.org/10.5406/americanmusic.33.4.0441>.
  2. Diane Collins, Sounds from the Stables: The Story of Sydney's Conservatorium (St. Leonards, N.S.W.: Allen & Unwin, 2001), 26.
  3. Fairchild, "Clouds, Crowds and Idols," 470.
  4. Collins, Sounds from the Stables, 17.

Conflicts with Chicago 17A and 17B

N.B. This guide departs in a few ways from Chicago-style 17 citation formats. If you spot conflicts, you may follow what's recommended in either this guide or the Chicago manual of style 17th edition, as long as you do so consistently within your paper or thesis. It is not correct to change citation formats within a paper. Postgraduates may also seek clarification from their supervisors.

Referring to songs, albums, or symphonies

Italicize the names of long works such as albums, symphonies, or song cycles, and

Include the year of composition or release the first time you mention them in a piece of writing:

Toby Martin's I Felt the Valley Lifting (2021)
Hector Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique (1830)

EXCEPT titles that are genre names, which you just capitalize e.g.
And for work titles with nicknames, use inverted commas:

Liza Lim's Piano Concerto (2021)
Franz Schubert's Symphony No.8 "Unfinished" (1822)

Shorter works such as songs or individual movements usually have inverted commas (again, unless they're generic):

Jadey O'Regan's "He Always Beats Me at Scrabble" (2006)
Allegro moderato from Clara Schumann's Piano Trio in G minor, op.17 (1846)

BOOKS (cont'd)

CHAPTER IN EDITED BOOK – referencing is based on working out who the author of the material is and referencing the entire thing they've written: here, a chapter

Footnote	6. David Larkin, "The First Cycle of Tone Poems," in The Cambridge Companion to Richard Strauss , ed. Charles Youmans (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2010), 64.
Bibliography	Larkin, David. "The First Cycle of Tone Poems." In The Cambridge Companion to Richard Strauss , edited by Charles Youmans, 59-77. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2010.

EDITED BOOK – it's unusual to find the whole book referred to like this in footnotes, but if you use multiple chapters from it, it's good to cite it as a whole in the bibliography (in addition to each chapter you use)

Footnote	7. James Wierzbicki, ed., Music, Sound and Filmmakers: Sonic Style in Cinema (London and New York: Routledge, 2012).
